Brand New Book  Print on Demand .Excerpt from A Complete Treatise of the Methods Used by Tom Barron, England: In Producing Heavy Layers Doing over nature, forcing the hen to lay eggs to an extent heretofore impossible has been the life work of the most justly celebrated of poultry breeders, Tom Barron, of Catforth, England; doing the very thing that nature made no provision for is the result of Tom Barron's work with hens, a work teeming with success to a degree that no American breeder has attained. Manufacturing at will fowls of any selected breed or variety that lay more than the fabled Goose of the golden egg, is to Barron as easy of accomplishment as is the failure of the ordinary poultry breeder to secure the two-hundred-egg hen. England's poultry annals are emblazoned with the victories of this poultry wonder-worker; pullets that lay 282 eggs in 365 days, after shipment from their English home to America, five of them averaging 238 eggs in a year, under government supervision, between set dates, November 1 st, 1912, to October 31 st, 1913, and without recording any eggs laid outside of these inclusive dates. The poultry world stands aghast at such records as have been made by the hens of this exceptional worker in egg production; since 1906 Tom Barron's layers have won prizes, almost numberless, in all of the English competitions and smashed every European, Canadian and American record for pens or individuals.
