Not illustrated. 1900 Excerpt: .conceives, the mother of industry; and industry is to human society what movement is to air and sea. Therefore, he boldly upholds his position as an industrial giant, and he considers enterprise on a vast scale, and the erection of colossal fortunes, to be normal processes, and essential conditions of modern society. He speaks of the various rungs of the social ladder with the authority of a man who has trod them all, and in the disengaged and impartial spirit with which such men are not always blessed. The upshot of the great changes in invention and discovery is, that for scarcity and dearness have been substituted cheapness and abundance, nay even, as he somewhat broadly assumes, improvement in quality to boot. The labourer (p. 3) has more comforts now than the farmer of a few generations back, the farmer now than the landlord then, the...
