The major test objectives of SIT were to prepare for later fully integrated oxygen with water recovery testing in the metabolic simulation testing to follow, as such to identify integration problems and focus on determining areas where further testing is needed to prove the integration concept is viable. Secondly, the trace contaminant control system (TCCS) was integrated and monitored differently in phase III than in phase II. Direct integration with the Bosch was implemented to process product gases of the carbon dioxide reduction design. Finally, the phase III SIT subsystems ran completely integrated for approximately 5 of the II days, whereas the phase II SIT ran completely integrated for 2 days. 2. 0 SYSTEM DESIGN PERFORMANCE The SIT configuration utilized four air revitalization subsystems, baselined by Boeing, located...
