It in a single of my personal favorite publication. It usually fails to charge an excessive amount of. Once you begin to read the book, it is extremely difficult to leave it before concluding.

Environmental Protection Agency, Office of Inspector General, 2001 OCLC Number: (OCoLC)50931020 Subject: Government productivity -- United States. Excerpt: . . . other federal and non-federal entities, difficult and costly to measure directly, and hard to explicitly link to some near term agency activities. As such, strategies often rely heavily on the fulfillment of largely EPA-controlled surrogate measures of human and ecological health, such as a reduction in the emissions of regulated pollutants or a reduction in the number of violations reported annually. The implicit assumption is that these reductions or changes will eventually lead to true human and ecological health. EPAs strategies recognize the need to rely on others for long term goal achievement. However, EPA needs to provide more explicit descriptions of the partnering activities, roles, and responsibilities for outcomes by these non-EPA groups. This would better enable external reviewers to both understand and evaluate the linkages between inputs, outputs, and outcomes, and accomplish GPRA's purpose of improving the public's confidence in the ability of federal agencies to manage for results. Recommendations We believe EPA has an opportunity to improve its GPRA strategic plan and simultaneously improve its relationship with state, local, and tribal agencies, as well as improve the public's confidence in the Agency. As such, we recommend that EPA: 3-1. Link other, more detailed, planning documents to its GPRA strategic plan by providing World Wide Web citations (links), thus providing external stakeholders with easy access to more in-depth information on how EPA plans on achieving long term goals. 3-2. Revise the existing Hierarchy of Performance Indicators to clearly establish a place for state, local, and tribal agencies expected roles in achieving environmental goals...
