Excerpt: . . . owner, for Mrs. Hacket, according to the inevitable habit of her sex, hung her arm over the side of the boat and trailed her idle left hand through the tepid water, --the sleeve, wringing wet at the wrist, clung to her. On her lap lay a small heap of rings which she had stripped off her fingers, -- emeralds and diamonds, sapphires and rubies, ---they gleamed in the sunshine, and she, notwithstanding her gender, did not look their way; she played absently with them, but her soft eyes were far away. More than once her wedding-ring slipped down to the knuckle of her finger, and she lifted her dripping hand and pushed it back to its right place; the circlet was a world too wide for the slim tenement. She was content, for . . . nature that is beautiful and dumb, Like a cool sleep upon the pulses broods. The sun was not fierce with the stifling heat of a summer noon, his warmth was temperate, and drew the scent of the clover from the fields; the light breeze blew it across the river. In the hedges thousands of new-born primroses crept out into life, the copper-red cattle munched the daisied mantles of the land, and no restless thought stole into the indolent heart to warn it of the clouds which were driving up from the southwest and which were hidden by the Knowle hill. It was pleasant on the river; it was pleasant...
