In them delicacy, beauty and harmony are replaced by strength and vigour, and refined, artistic perception yields to intensity of feeling. Probably at least nine-tenths of the Oriental rugs now for sale belong to the second of these groups. As their weavers are no longer sustained by the strength of tradition, the patterns show little artistic originality and degenerate into weak conventions; yet most of these rugs are beautiful and possess the great essentials of expressive colour and rhythmic lines. They harmonize well with the usual furnishings of a household and meet the requirements of most purchasers. The old types, on the other hand, are preferred by those whose minds yield to the spell of association and whose moods are susceptible to the influence of the spirit that dominated the weaver. Such rugs afford a lasting delight to whoever knows their history and can appreciate their qualities, while the interest in modern rugs often wanes. Before it is too late, then, let the purchaser, though he select from a stock of commercial products for most of his floor coverings, not fail to lay aside some old rug of interesting history that for years has remained an heirloom in an Oriental home, or one whose nomadic character is true to those early traditions of a simple and symbolic art that prevailed long ages ago. A Forthcoming Article--The many admirers of Mr. Albert Sterner s work will welcome the news that The International Studio has...
