This and the following Essay, the Authors first contribution to science, were published early in 1799. They were commenced at Penzance, shortly after he had entered on the study of Chemistry; and were finished at Clifton, twenty months later. Less than two years after, namely in December, 1800, referring to these productions, he designates them, my infant chemical speculations; t and, considering them chiefly in the light of mere speculations, he appears then to have greatly under-rated them, and to have formed an opinion of them himself far more unfavourable than they deserved as a whole, or than posterity, it is probable, will acknowledge to be correct. The following estimate of them was made at the time, by a very able judge, and candid critic, the distinguished and venerable Priestley. In the Appendix to his last chemical work, he thus expresses himself: -- When some progress was made in printing this work, (The Doctrine of Phlogiston established) I met with Dr. Beddoes Contributions to Physical Knowledge, and in it, Mr. H. Davys Essays, which have impressed me with a high opinion of his philosophical acumen. His ideas were to me new, and very striking, but they are of too great consequence to be decided upon hastily. Considering these Essays dispassionately after a lapse of forty years, the chief fault of them was, decidedly, that which their Author almost immediately perceived, namely, hastiness of generalisation, --and the apparent presumption indicated by it. As regards the speculations...
