Brand New Book  Print on Demand .Excerpt from The White Pine, Vol. 1: Series of Architectural Monographs, New England Colonial Hovses In this house there existed a curious detail of construction in the window-caps, intended to protect the top of the window-case, which was projected beyond the frame of the building and applied to its face in the old-fashioned way. These molded caps were crowned by a sloping member, carefully hewn and shaped from one heavy log of wood so as to provide a sloping wash across the top and front and returned on the two ends; while the carpenter took pains to leave a standing flange at the back over which the siding was broken, thus providing a sort of flashing, but executed entirely in wood! Later in the 18th century, the American builders began to secure the Carpenter s Handbooks, first published in England about 1756, and from these they developed new details far more easily, merely adapting them to the somewhat simplified conditions and requirements of the American village or town in which they lived and worked. Later, the demand for these practical builders assistants became so great that at least one volume was reprinted in this country; being compiled and issued by a certain Asher Benjamin, an architect in Greenfield, Massachusetts, in 1797. For a number of years the plan developed few changes, except in so far as they were demanded by special or larger requirements imposed by the owner.
